Mediafire.org.net.Q: How to assign value of variable to the attributes of each element in a list of strings in Python?

I'm making a program where I have to assign a name to a label for each element in a list (name is the name of the output file), then when a new element comes I compare if its name and the name of the previous element. If the name matches, I replace the previous element's name by the new element's name and reassign the old one as "none". If not, I reassign it as "none". I have to use None as its not possible to modify files while doing it and I dont want the user to see the files being replaced. I have the following code so far:

labels = [] labels.append('temp0') labels.append('temp1') labels.append('temp2')
labels.append('temp3') labels.append('temp4') labels.append('temp5') for i in range(len(labels)): if i==0:
print(labels[i]) elif labels[i]!= labels[i-1]: # replaces the name of the label with the name of the new element print(labels[i]) labels[i-1] = None Could someone guide me on how to replace each element by the name of the new element, keeping the last element "
