Aquaporin 3 (AQP3) is a major water channel abundant in cells of the renal cortex and the lens of the eye. Its expression in the kidney has been related to the pathogenesis of diabetes and other complications. Recently, we and others have found that the lens AQP3 is degraded in response to extracellular oxidative stress and that its degradation is mediated by furin, a metalloendoprotease. The degradation of AQP3 alters its function and results in abnormally elevated water permeability. In this proposal we will examine the relationship between AQP3 expression and the pathogenesis of various cataracts and diabetic nephropathy. We have obtained evidence that the furin-specific cleavage of the AQP3 causes the loss of lens transparency. Thus, our first aim is to characterize the structure and function of the proteolytic fragments that are formed in the lens in response to oxidative stress and examine their possible role in cataractogenesis. Our second aim is to determine whether other proteins are similarly degraded and to explore the role of furin in degrading other lens proteins. Our third aim is to determine the effects of AQP3 expression on lens function. Recently, we have characterized a new transgenic mouse model (Aqp3) in which overexpression of human AQP3 in lens fiber cells causes the lens to become opaque and dry. We will characterize this phenotype in more detail and determine the mechanism of the cataract. In addition, we will determine the consequences of AQP3 overexpression on lens function. We believe that our studies on the regulation of AQP3 expression and degradation will reveal novel mechanisms controlling lens transparency and may be relevant to understanding the development of cataracts in diabetes.

In a statement sent to Gizmodo, a spokesperson for BlackBerry said that the company has no immediate plans to release its own device in the U.S. "At this time, we continue to focus our resources and efforts to retain and grow our business in the market," the statement said. Still, the company's partnership with TCL on the new Q5 and Q10 smartphones means it's not going anywhere, apparently. "Our relationship with TCL will continue," Blackberry said. TCL, based in Taiwan, is the second-largest mobile phone manufacturer in the world, and the company's phones have a reputation for being affordable and popular with consumers. BlackBerry, for its part, is known for offering more expensive,

Q: SSIS Date-time cannot be cast to type of? I have the following code in an SSIS script task: string FromSql = Dts.Variables["User::FromSql"].Value.ToString(); string ToSql = Dts.Variables["User::ToSql"].Value.ToString(); string FromValue = dt.Rows[0].Field("From").ToString(); string ToValue = dt.Rows[0].Field("To").ToString(); DateTime From= (DateTime)FromValue; DateTime To= (DateTime)ToValue; When I execute my script I am getting this error: Type error was detected during execution of transformation "Script Main". - Type "DateTime" cannot be used as type "System.Nullable" of "System.DateTime" because they do not have the same type. I am not sure how to resolve this issue. A: I think DateTime is similar to DateTime?. DateTime? is not nullable and DateTime is not nullable. (From MSDN) DateTime (not nullable) and Nullable. So you can cast from Nullable to DateTime DateTime? ToDateTime() { if (value.HasValue) { return (DateTime)value; } return default(DateTime); } DateTime ToDateTime() { if (value.HasValue) { return (DateTime)value; } return default(DateTime); } I think this should work. See this link for more info. (From MSDN) The White House says some of the most problematic of President Donald Trump's comments about minorities and minorities have been "taken out of context." In a statement released Monday, the White House said the president was not referring to immigrants who are "saying that this is a country for white people." Trump was speaking about the comments
