Alpha-acyloxyaziridines were synthesized and evaluated as potential radiosensitizers for the treatment of hypoxic cells. This series of compounds are structurally related to the hypoxia selective aziridines but they have a slightly improved in vitro radiosensitizing efficiency. The high susceptibility of these compounds to nonspecific nucleophilic attack makes them more promising radiosensitizers than most of the tested aziridines.Q: How to form a functional grammar that generates the Basso inversion I'm working on a project where I need to generate a language using a grammar that generates the Basso inversion, a problem from the mathematics of music. I have some partial results, but I'm not sure if they're correct. It seems that my grammar is not recursive, but I'm not sure how to form a correct recursive grammar that generates the Basso inversion. How do I approach solving this problem? A: Just thinking about other ways of solving the problem, you might look at a grammar that produces exactly one sentence. That is, you have the start symbol S , and for each non-terminal symbol X , you have the right production: $S \rightarrow X$. This just means that the sentence has to have a non-terminal symbol in it. You can then apply the usual process of transforming the grammar into a recursive grammar (working down, not up). It's just that S is too small to be a non-terminal symbol. I think there are two ways to do this. 1) Replace S with a real non-terminal symbol, and then in the grammar, omit the production $S \rightarrow S$. 2) Make S into an
